

A GUIDE TO USING THE CERTIFICATE OF CAPACITY

PART A

Your diagnosis should identify the nature of injury or disease and a bodily location.

Provide clinical symptoms and diagnosis.

It is important to include all conditions that affect the person's ability to do their work, where consent to do so is granted.

In most cases it is in the best interests of your patients to talk about factors that are impacting their capacity to work and what supports can be put in place in the workplace to assist them.

For the clinical symptoms/ diagnosis provided, outline a clear plan for recovery, including current, proposed treatment and investigations required. This should include support services and strategies to maximise recovery, increase capacity for work, address any return to work barriers and prevent recurrence of injury.

Assess what your patient can do.

Your assessment of your patient's capacity to work is about their capacity for work in general and is not job-specific.

If capacity is affected, give advice about the functional effects of your patient's health condition. Outline in general terms what your patient can do with modifications, or cannot do.

Consider both physical and mental health functions.

Information provided in this section assists employers and case managers to provide suitable work.

If your patient is unfit to return to work, give advice about the functional effects or issues impacting their return to work.

To facilitate return to work, it is preferable that this period is not > 6 weeks.

If you have identified that your patient is totally unfit for any form of work, provide clinical reasoning and what actions will assist in determining next steps for recovery.

If a return to work plan has been developed for your patient by the employer or workplace rehabilitation provider, and you support the plan, then you can select this option rather than specify modifications.

Include expectations of recovery and return to work in this section. It is important to discuss with your patient when you expect they should be able to return to work in some capacity.

Where consent to do so is granted, list any work, environmental, social or personal circumstances that are related to or impact, recovery and return to work, as well as other medical conditions.

Ensure that your patient understands the information provided in the form and consents to providing it to their employer/insurer.

Return to work case conferencing is a meeting between your patient and a supporting individual, rehabilitation providers, GPs and the employer. It provides the opportunity for all stakeholders to communicate requirements for recovery at work, discuss needs for supports such as flexibility, workplace adjustments and agree on an approach that focuses on supporting participation in work.

Return to work case conferences are a useful tool to facilitate communication with all stakeholders involved in the recovery and return to work process. By marking this box you are indicating to the employer that you would like a case conference arranged for your patient or that you would like to be involved in a case conference to discuss recovery and return to work.
